Numb. 387.

THE Pennſylvania GAZETTE.

Containing the freſheſt Advices Foreign and Domeſtick.

From April 29. to May 6. 1736.

TURNING over the weekly Performances lately publiſhed in London, I met with the following Dream. "Having arrived on the 'other Side of the River, (ſays the Dream-'Teller) one of the Shades thus addreſ-'ſed itſelf to me. Whenever a Stranger ap-'pears amongſt us, I am ordered to be his Conductor 'through theſe Regions of Bliſs, and to explain to him 'ſome of the Wonders of our bleſt Abode. Know then, 'that all thoſe Spirits whom you now behold, were at 'their Creation, placed in a yet more exalted State of Glo-'ry than they at preſent enjoy; but having fallen into Sin, 'to expiate their Crimes, were condemned to actuate hu-'man Bodies for a certain Space of Time, by tranſmi-'grating from one to another. That Term expired, theſe 'Manſions of Joy receive them. Their Places in the ſub-'lunary World are ſupply'd by other Spirits, who are ſent 'there to receive Puniſhment; which would not have been 'adequate to their Crimes if they were only to animate a 'Clod of Earth; but for their greater Mortification, they 'are coupled with other Beings of a contrary nature, irreſiſti-'bly inclin'd to Wickedneſs. For a human Body is actuated 'by two different Souls: The one is earthly, and dies with 'the Carcaſs; the other is immaterial and immortal. As 'of the former Sort, ſome are more viciouſly diſpos'd than 'others; ſo of the latter there are different Orders, as they 'more or leſs approach to Perfection. Hence the Actions 'of Men are virtuous or vicious, according as the good or 'evil Genius prevails. The moſt exalted Soul cannot exert 'its noble Faculties, if 'tis unhappily born down by a ſupe-'rior Adverſary: But when the Oppoſition is weak, then 'the Man ſo poſſeſſed ſeems to ſoar above Humanity. 'The Operations of the Mind at its firſt Entrance into the 'World, appear with greater Luſtre than at any other time 'during the whole Courſe of its Tranſmigration, 'til it arrives 'to its laſt Stage, and then its innate Virtues more emi-'nently ſhine out, and the happy Spirit makes its final Exit 'in a Blaze of Divinity. Obſerve that amiable Shade, who 'is diſcaurſing to a Croud of Ghoſts; you imagine it's Clarke, 'but it's the ſame Soul that animated Socrates. Newton and 'Archimedes is the ſame identical Perſon under different 'Names; as is Locke and Ariſtotle. The Hiſtory of their 'ſeveral Tranſmigrations is diverting. Ariſtotle was once a 'pedantick King, and bore the Name of ------; but he 'declares, if it had been left to his choice, he would rather 'have been a profeſt Punſter, a Corn-cutter, or a Merry-'Andrew. He has often been a pettifogging Attorney, 'without any other Qualifications than Ignorance and Im-'pudence. He has done a great deal of Miſchief in the 'World, when he was known by the Names of Machiavel 'and Richelieu. He has often defended and has as often 'damn'd the Treatiſes he firſt publiſhed. A certain cele-'brated Philoſopher of the laſt Age did not know, when 'he railed againſt the Stagyrite, that he was all the time 'curſing himſelf. Of all his different Lives he only reflects 'on three with Pleaſure; namely the firſt and the laſt, '(which as I told you are always the happieſt) and one, 'when join'd with Cato he had the Adminiſtration of Af-'fairs under Queen Elizabeth. At that Time he purſu'd 'the ſame Maxims of Government laid down in his origi-'nal Politicks. There are ſeveral other illuſtrious Names 'of Antiquity who have not yet reached theſe happy A-'bodes. Plato is at preſent a King, and has the Govern-'ment of the moſt powerful Empire on the Globe: He is 'now moulding a real Republick, into a better Form than 'that he at firſt only painted out by the Force of Imagina-'tion. Cicero is his Prime Miniſter. As they are now act-'ing more noble Parts, than what they at firſt performed 'on the Theatres of Athens and Rome, according to the 'Laws of Tranſmigration we ſhall ſoon enjoy their Compa-'ny. But the immortal Gods have lengthned this their laſt 'earthly Scene for the Good of Mankind. When the Af-'fairs of Europe are ſettled, Cicero is determined to puniſh 'ſome of the Proconſuls, who ſtrut and king it away in the 'Provinces, and who uſurp the Title ap-'propriated to their royal Maſter, by cal-'ling themſelves God's Viceperents, to which 'they have juſt as much Right as the Pa-'riſh Conſtables, who as well as the others execute their 'Office in the King's Name. This Miniſter will never per-'mit the Character of the mildeſt and moſt gracious Prince 'in the World, to be falſely repreſented by thoſe hopeful 'deputy Kings, who by their Conduct make the People 'believe he reigns for his own private Good, excluſive of 'that of the Publick. Nor will he ſuffer the Prerogative 'to be abuſed under Pretence of maintaining the Preroga-'tive, &c. Z.

Vid. Mercury, No. 851.

The Remainder of this Dream to be communicated on proper Occaſions.

London, December 13. Yeſterday ſe'nnight a remarkable Accident happen'd at St. Stephen's near St. Alban's, where ſome Labourers having ſunk a Well to a great Depth, the Earth fell in upon one of the Men, and cover'd him over except his Head, and one Arm; upon which he call'd to his Companions for Aſſiſtance, one of whom went down, who got his other Arm out, and faſtening the Rope under his Arm-pits, endeavour'd to pull him out, but the Weight of Earth was ſo heavy upon him, that he was oblig'd to deſire them to deſiſt: In this melancholly Situation he remain'd till Sunday Morning, during which Time he receiv'd all poſſible Aſſiſtance from the Neighbourhood, and a Perſon being then digging him out, perceiv'd ſome more Earth to fall, upon which he made a Signal to be drawn up, which was no ſooner done, than the Earth fell upon the poor unhappy Man, and ſmother'd him.

Friday laſt Week the Wife of a Shoe-Blacker in Fetter-lane came home ſo much intoxicated with Geneva, that ſhe fell on the Fire, and was burnt in a miſerable Manner, ſo that ſhe immediately died, and her Bowels burſt out.

London, December 20. On Monday Night laſt, a Basket, with a Letter on the Outſide, was dropp'd in Sherborne-lane, near the Bounds of two Pariſhes; the Church-warden of one of them being inform'd thereof, and ſuſpecting it to be a Baſtard Child, took a Watchman to witneſs it was three Yards out of the Pariſh he belong'd to. The Officers of the other Pariſh being by this Time acquainted with the Affair, came and found the Letter directed to them; the Contents of which recommended to their Care, in a very moving Terms, what was contained in the Basket; aſſuring them, that as it was deſcended of a very great Family, it requir'd the utmoſt Circumſpection, on their Side, in giving it a proper Education; and that, in all Probability, a Time would come, when they would be convinced that Education was not thrown away: Upon this they open'd the Basket with the utmoſt Impatience, when to their Surprize out jump'd a large black Cat, which ran clear out of both the Pariſhes, and prevented all Charges and Diſputes on both Sides.

December 29. We hear, that the Diſſenters are abſolutely reſolved to apply to the Parliament for the Repeal of the Teſt Act.

January 3. They write from Longhoughton in Northumberland, that on the 14th of December one Anne Yardy was committed to Morpheth Goal by Mr. Robert Claxon, one of the Coroners for the ſaid County, for the Murder of her Aunt, Jane Young. Upon her Examination ſhe was asked, Why ſhe committed that barbarous Fact? Her Anſwer was, Becauſe ſhe knew ſhe ſhould be puniſhed with Death for it. Her Aunt was blind, and aged about 70: She dragg'd her out of Bed, and killed her with an Ax. The Neighbours broke in upon her on the old Woman's crying out, but found her lying dead at her Feet, when ſhe uſed the Expreſſion aforeſaid. Since her Commitment ſhe has been handcuff'd, and ſays little or nothing. She hath been known to be a little Lunatick ſome Years before, but never threaten'd to do Miſchief to any but herſelf, and when out of that melancholy Condition was a very handy and uſeful Woman.

Abſtract of a Letter from Corke.

LAST Week we had Three Ships loſt between Corke Harbour and Youghall. One a Dutchman loaded with Wine and Pieces of Eight. The Men were all ſaved, and might have ſaved their Treaſure; but they rather choſe to come naked aſhore, apprehending their Money might be a Temptation to the People of the Country to knock them on the Head. A ſecond was a Weſt-India-Veſſel, who ſunk out-right, not a Man ſaved. Several of the Bodies have been thrown up by the Tide: and by their Clothes, they appear to be Gentlemen: By Writings found in a Cheſt that was driven on Shoar, they find there were Thirty-Two Paſſengers on board. The Third was a ſmall Ship bound to Lisbon, with about 1200 Firkins of Butter on board, which might alſo have been ſaved; but the Country came down and plundered her of all, except 140 Firkins, notwithſtanding the Biſhop of Cloyn, and ſeveral other Gentlemen, did their utmoſt to protect them.

London, Jan. 10. It is confirmed from Conſtantinople, that Thamas Kouli Kan has made himſelf Maſter of Erivan; but does not ſeem inclined to treat of Peace with the Ottoman Court. The Grand Vizier, to ſtill the Murmurs of the Populace, gives out the Treaty is far advanced; his Enemies having endeavoured to ſpread contrary Reports among the People, that Prime Miniſter, notwithſtandig his great Lenity, has puniſh'd ſome of them with Death.

THough the Circumſtances of Times had obliged us to defer till now, giving your Majeſty the Marks of the cordial and ſincere Affection we have always preſerved for your Majeſty's Perſon, perſuaded, as we were, of your Zeal for the Catholick Religion, as alſo your ſingular Piety, and filial Duty to the Holy See; we are nevertheleſs aſſured, your Majeſty is fully diſpos'd to believe, that the Expreſſions the Archbiſhop of Jonia, our Nuntio with your Majeſty, is charg'd with in our Name, proceed from a Heart truly paternal and affectionate to your Majeſty's Perſon, which we conſider, and ſhall always regard with a diſtinguiſhed and particular Love.

Extract of a Letter from Paris, dated Feb. 1.

THE French Troops, hardly reconcil'd yet to see their Swords converted to Plough-Shares, being set on some publick Work last Week without one of the Gates of Paris, quarrel'd with each other for want of a Foreign Enemy, and a furious Battle commenc'd: The Fray being between the French Guards and the Swiss, numerous Reinforcements came to each Side in a Moment, insomuch that very bad Consequences were apprehended, had not the Governor of Paris interpos'd, and caus'd them to disperse; as it was, five were killed, and several wounded.

London, Feb. 17. Yesterday being the next day after the last Full Moon before the Equinox, there was a Spring Tide, which flowed so high as to exceed near a Foot, any that has been known in the Memory of Man. At Westminster-Hall the Court of Common-Pleas being sitting, several of the Council, &c. were carried out of the Hall to their Coaches in Boats, who plyed both in the Hall and the Palace Yards; most of the Cellars in Westminster were fill'd with Water; the Privy-Garden at White-hall, and the Parade in St. James's Park were also overflowed. The Water came over Tower-Wharff, and the Cellars and Offices on the Banks of the River, both above and below Bridge, were all under Water.

On Tuesday Night last a melancholly Accident happened at Falmouth, where the Ship John and Margaret, Capt. Larkins, for South-Carolina, having sprung a Leak, was brought into the Bar, in order to have it stopt; and the Master being on Shore, a Candle was left in the Cabbin, which (by some Accident unknown) took fire, which as soon as the People on board perceived, they quitted her, and gave an account to the Master, who in hopes to save his Papers, would venture on board, and there being sixty half Barrels of Gun Powder in the Ship, she blew up with him, and he was taken up dead at a considerable distance.
